Regulatory challenges & opportunities in antibiotic drug development & registration

Antibiotic resistance in bacteria poses a major problem to modern public health. Infections that were once routinely treated with antibiotics have become extremely problematic to effectively kill, making even simple surgical operations dangerous from the perspective of contracting a resistant infection. Resistant strains of bacteria, such as methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus, have sprung up in hospitals where they must be carefully contained lest the infection spread further.

CNS Orphan Diseases - The Alternative Route in CNS

In highly prevalent disorders, such as Parkinson's or Alzheimer's disease, there is significant inter-patient variability in symptoms. In the case of orphan CNS indications, the cause of the disease can usually be traced to a single gene. This makes it easier for drug developers to identify targets for those agents, and increases the chance of a disease-modifying therapy being developed.

17th - 18th June 2014 at the Tower Bridge Hilton, 5 More London Place, Tooley Street, SE1 2BY in London, United Kingdom

The Patients Summit

Pharma has recognised that to keep up with the competition and truly deliver a superior service to patients, it needs to offer more than just a pill. Pharma needs to understand how it can better serve its patients, but also that by partnering with your patients and better understanding their holistic healthcare needs it can ensure patient adherence and better attract the attention of other stakeholders: including payers and HCPs. This conference gives you just that.
